

FOREIGN RESIDENTS AT WORK IN JAPAN

For Japan to become more competitive on the global stage, it is essential to encourage talented individuals from around the world to work and settle in Japan.

As a nation, we are in the process of establishing a system to provide a better, more welcoming environment in which foreign residents can work and thrive. We must first consider, however, how expats in Japan are actually living.

In this issue, we examine the working lives and lifestyles of several foreign residents. Some have established companies here, while others are employed by Japanese businesses, international firms and other organizations that have sought out foreign talent. Their impressions and experiences will help us build that more appealing environment and make Japan stronger.
